Consultation and Engagement Factsheet 2

Introduction

We aim to be a good neighbour in everything we do, from the running of our services to the construction of major station upgrades. The proposed Camden Town Station Capacity Upgrade is a major engineering challenge. It requires consultation and engagement with, among others, political representatives; people who live, own or occupy properties close to the proposed scheme; and passengers who use the station.

Before any work can take place, we must apply for a Transport and Works Act Order. Stakeholder engagement and consultation form an important part of this application process.

Ongoing engagement

We have been in contact with a wide range of stakeholders. This includes Camden Council, the local Member of Parliament and London Assembly Member, statutory bodies, transport groups, Conservation Area Advisory Committees, businesses, property owners, residents, local groups and passengers.

Regular engagement will continue to take place to discuss the developing proposals.

Public consultations

- Autumn 2015: Our first public consultation outlined the need for a station capacity upgrade and sought feedback on our initial proposals

- January 2017: We consulted on a building above and around the proposed new station entrance. Referred to as the ‘over-station development’, this would provide much-needed homes, commercial space for small businesses and retail. We must make a separate planning application to Camden Council for permission and this would be built once the new entrance is complete
Summer 2017: Now our scheme is more developed our second public consultation is focused on the detail of what we are proposing for the station capacity upgrade

In 2018: We will carry out a third public consultation that focuses on how we build the new station entrance and manage the construction impacts

Camden Council will lead the consultation on changes to the public realm on Buck Street.

Feedback will continue to be used to help shape our proposals.
